I. The light that convulses in the sky has traveled half a million years to reach you now.

Where and when are you?

II. Subject to collision: flesh does not consciously hold vulnerability. It always comes as a surprise, what you are has already made many outbursts.

You are made from something that has never run out of itself.

III. How things are named must be convenient. And what will an emptiness become based on your intuition today.

IV. Things are called in ways that make them open: for access.

V. How space is seen is how it becomes visible: palatable: tangible. The brightest thing you see tonight may not be the nearest.

VI. Humans and their distances their longing to touch.

VII. It will always be an unknown variable, what there is to know. Light has not made it that far, just yet.
